

Frank Partnoy is a leading expert on the complexities of modern finance and financial market regulation. He worked as a derivatives structurer at Morgan Stanley and CS First Boston during the mid-1990s and wrote F.I.A.S.C.O.: Blood in the Water on Wall Street, a best-selling book about his experiences there. Since 1997, he has been a law professor teaching corporate law and finance at the University of San Diego, and an expert writing and speaking about markets to Congress, regulators, academics, and investors. His recent books include Infectious Greed: How Deceit and Risk Corrupted the Financial Markets, and Corporations Law and Policy: Materials and Problems (Thomson West 6th Ed. 2007, with Jeffrey D. Bauman and Alan R. Palmiter). He has written dozens of opinion pieces for The New York Times and The Financial Times, and more than two dozen scholarly articles published in academic journals including The Journal of Finance. His most recent book, The Match King, about the 1920s markets and Ivar Kreuger, who many consider the father of modern financial schemes and the impetus for the 1930s securities laws, will be published in April 2009 by PublicAffairs. He also is coauthor of Business Organization and Finance, Legal and Economic Principles (with John C. Coffee, Jr. and William A. Klein, forthcoming 2010).
