

JEFF LEEN

Investigations Editor, Washington Post

Jeff Leen has been a member of the Washington Post's Investigative Unit since 1997. He is currently the assistant managing editor in charge of the unit. Before joining The Post, he worked for 10 years as an investigative reporter at the Miami Herald, where he specialized in covering the cocaine trade and co-authored Kings of Cocaine, the first book-length investigation of Columbia's Medellin Cartel. As a reporter or an editor, he has worked on investigations that have been honored with six Pulitzer Prizes: Hurricane Andrew's impact in South Florida, police shootings in the District of Columbia, abuse in D.C. group homes, deaths among children monitored by D.C. social services, the 9-11 plot and the Jack Abramoff lobbying scandal. Four other investigations have been Pulitzer finalists, including examinations of the Nature Conservancy, the Abu Ghraib prison scandal and farm subsidies.
